

Sage and Ginger

The owners of this new house moved from New York and looked forward to entertaining often and without stress. “They wanted a dining room with a wow factor but did not want it to be off limits,” says interior designer Emily Fuhrman. “We made sure that each piece offered nuance and character but nothing too precious.” A custom Robert James dining table seats twelve and is itself a piece of art, surrounded by sculptural Cliff Young chairs. A mix of metals, like the mid-century spiked chandelier, add spark to the space. Black accents up the wow factor, and a black and white print of the Roosevelt Tramway reminds the owners of their former Manhattan view. To meet the challenge of making the room child-friendly, the upholstery is made of cleanable fabric, gorgeous white oak floors need no area rug, and a wire-brushed finish renders the table more durable. – BY JILL JOHNSON MANN
